Distributing Clothing To Those In Need In A 21st Century Way

Care For The Children recognizes that due to the current economic crisis, the number of families who need assistance has increased dramatically, while at the same time, those who provide services are experiencing hardships themselves. Therefore, Care For The Children sought out a process to provide a means of distributing clothing to families with children in need that is both innovative and cost effective. At the conclusion of our search, and after examining the data collected from many facets of the clothing industry, the Clothing Distribution Voucher Program was created. Although there are many organizations that provide valuable services to communities, ensuring the public has access to food, shelter and clothing, our approach in providing clothing is designed so that participating families will receive an additional benefit by becoming more familiar with commerce, trade and purchasing in the 21st Century using the internet.

Innovation In Providing Assistance

Brick and Mortar Buildings will continue to exist, however, with the advancements in communication technologies, we as a society must begin to adapt and utilize these new technologies wherein they become a part of daily life. In our view, using tried and true distribution channels normally associated with shipping and receiving parcel, these same mechanisms can be used as a means to distribute clothing to families in need. With this method, there is no additional warehousing or storage required as compared to those organizations that inventory, store and distribute. Lacking the need to store or warehouse clothing, Care For The Children technically increases the effective use of funds and resources in distributing clothing, as well as other facets of the charity. This innovative approach provides assurance to those who donate to our cause in that their gift is being effectively used for the intended purposes. This innovative approach also provides a greater return on investment in that the participating families receive clothing and become active members of a growing community of online shoppers.
